The Federal Government's Role In Air Travel

The federal government plays a large role in our country's air travel system. Two of the most important roles are conducting the security screening for airline passengers, and operating the air traffic control system. I have a few questions about the federal government's role in air travel.

7. Which of the following statements comes closer to your view about security screening at airports: (ROTATE)

- a) Long lines and wait times at airport security check points are the inevitable result of living in an age of terrorism where all passengers need to be thoroughly checked before boarding airplanes.
- b) While thorough passenger screening in an age of terrorism is critically important, the long lines and wait times at airport security check points are made far worse by outdated technology and inefficient procedures.

	REP	DEM
LONG LINES INEVITABLE.....	52%	48%
OUTDATED TECHNOLOGY/INEFFICIENCY.....	37%	43%
DON'T KNOW/NO OPINION.....	11%	10%

9. There is a new system being planned to upgrade the technology for the air traffic control system by using G-P-S or satellite technology. Ideally, that system will improve safety and reduce flight delays and cancellations, but it is expensive. How important would you say it is to develop and implement that newer air traffic control system: very important, somewhat important, or not too important?

	REP	DEM
VERY IMPORTANT	60%	66%
SOMEWHAT IMPORTANT	28%	21%
NOT TOO IMPORTANT	7%	7%
